Stu,

Should this sentence (which is the first sentence in the report) The K-2 FAIR is a classroom teacher delivered battery of early reading and pre-reading skills used by the State of Florida in both a screening and progress monitoring capacity have the words "to assess" added after the word "battery" and the word "of" removed so it reads, The K-2 FAIR is a classroom teacher delivered battery to assess early reading and pre-reading skills used by the State of Florida in both a screening and progress monitoring capacity. It doesn't seem like FAIR is a battery of early reading and pre-reading skills...but maybe in Yaacov's world that makes sense. I agree with Kevin that overall the language is clearer.

Thanks for all of your work and have a great day!

Given the new insights, here is a re-drafted report with the new areas highlighted. The last statement in the summary is, of course, supported by research but I wanted to stay away from causal language. Please let me know if any edits you'd like to see included.
