they deserve. That-3 ?s why we are disappointed that senators from both parties are backtracking on reforms that would hold teachers and principals accountable for what matters most: helping students learn. We are particularly disappointed that they would endorse the same retreat from accountability that national special interest groups are seeking.

The federal government shouldn-3 ?t tell us how to run our schools, but it has a right to demand results when we take taxpayer money intended to help students. Our country can-3 ?t afford to keep sending billions of dollars a year to schools without asking whether teachers are actually helping students learn. Now is not the time to turn away from common-sense reforms that value results over bureaucratic red tape.-3 ?
